

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WELTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

123
124
125
126
127
128
129
130

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH
Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19 20

© 1984

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

L'institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- Coloured covers/
Couverture de couleur
- Covers damaged/
Couverture endommagée
- Covers restored and/or laminated/
Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- Cover title missing/
Le titre de couverture manque
- Coloured maps/
Cartes géographiques en couleur
- Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/ Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- Coloured plates and/or illustrations/
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- Bound with other material/
Relié avec d'autres documents
- Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/
La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure
- Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/
Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.
- Additional comments:/
Commentaires supplémentaires:

- Coloured pages/
Pages de couleur
- Pages damaged/
Pages endommagées
- Pages restored and/or laminated/
Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- Pages detached/
Pages détachées
- Showthrough/
Transparence
- Quality of print varies/
Qualité inégale de l'impression
- Includes supplementary material/
Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- Only edition available/
Seule édition disponible
- Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/
Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/
Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

10X	14X	18X	22X	26X	30X
<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
12X	16X	20X	24X	28X	32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Mill Memorial Library
McMaster University

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Mill Memorial Library
McMaster University

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \rightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

A N
O R A T I O N
I N M E M O R Y O F
G E N E R A L M O N T G O M E R Y,
A N D O F T H E
O F F I C E R S A N D S O L D I E R S,

W H O F E L L W I T H H I M, D E C E M B E R 31, 1775.

B E F O R E

Q U E B E C.

D R A W N U P (A N D D E L I V E R E D F E B R U A R Y 15th, 1776.)
A T T H E D E S I R E O F T H E
H O N O R A B L E C O N T I N E N T A L C O N G R E S S.

B Y W I L L I A M S M I T H, D. D.
P R O V O S T O F T H E C O L L E G E A N D A C A D E M Y
O F P H I L A D E L P H I A.

O thou, who bad'st them fall with honor crown'd,
Soon make the bloody pride of war to cease!
May these the only sacrifices be found
To public freedom, and their country's peace.

P H I L A D E L P H I A:
P R I N T E R B Y J O H N D U N L A P,
A N D B E L F A S T: R e p r i n t e d,
B Y J A M E S H A G G E, A T T H E R O A D A N D C A S S E T
I N B R I D G E - S T R E E T. M. D C C L X X V I.

McMASTER UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

IN CONGRESS,

JANUARY 25, 1776.

RESOLVED, That Dr. Smith be desired to prepare and deliver a FUNERAL ORATION in Honor of General MONTGOMERY, and of those Officers and Soldiers who magnanimously fought and fell with him in maintaining the principles of American Liberty.

Extract from the Minutes,

CHARLES THOMSON, Sec.

IN pursuance of this appointment the following Oration was drawn up; and as the Author knew that he was to address as great and respectable an audience, perhaps, as was ever convened in America, he neither wish'd to trifle with their character or his own, but used every effort in his power to render the composition worthy of the Occasion; and now cheerfully submits it to the public judgment. He foresaw the difficulties incident to the undertaking; and (upon the principles mentioned p. 16, 17,) was prepared to encounter them.

Two or three Quotations have been transferred from the text to the margin; a few small alterations, chiefly verbal, have been made; upon the recommendation of some friends, and a paragraph, (p. 46.) which was forgot in the delivery, is printed in its place. [Upon the whole, the Author hopes he has done justice to the memory of those brave men who are the subjects of the Oration; and with respect to those reflections upon public affairs which must rise out of public characters, and are intimately connected with them, he is so far from wishing them retrench'd, that (on a careful review) he is willing to rest, upon them, whatever claim he may have to the appellation of a good Citizen or Friend to Liberty, so long as it may be remembered that he either liv'd or wrote in America!

A N

O R A T I O N, &c.

Fathers, Brethren and Countrymen!

AN occasion truly solemn has assembled us this day; and, that your attention may be alike solemn and serious, hear, in the first place, the voice of eternal Truth—"It is better to go to the House of Mourning than to the House of Feasting;" for—"None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself"—

BUT there are some men, illuminated with a purer ray of divinity—Patriots of the first magnitude—who, in a peculiar sense, may be said to live and die, not to themselves, but to others; and consequently to him who is the author of all goodness. Endow'd with that superior excellence which does honour to our whole species, the virtuous of every nation claim kindred with them; and the general interests of humanity are concern'd in their character.

IN veneration of such men, to exchange the accustomed walks of pleasure for the House of Mourning; to bedew its sacred recesses with tears of gratitude to their memory; to strive, if possible, ble,

ble, to catch some portion of their ethereal Spirit, as it mounts from this earthly sphere, into perfect union with congenial Spirits above—is a laudable custom, cocval with society, and sanctified to us by the example of the wisest nations.

IT was the manner of the Egyptians, the fathers of arts and science, not only to celebrate the names, but to embalm the bodies, of their deceased heroes, that they might be long preserv'd in public view, as examples of virtue; and although “dead, yet speaking.”

BUT this honour was not easily to be obtain'd; nor was it bestow'd indiscriminately upon the VULGAR GREAT. It was decreed only by the public voice—a venerable assembly of Judges, before whom the body of the deceased was brought for trial, and solemnly acquitted or condemned upon the evidence of the people.

EVEN Kings themselves, however much spared when alive, for the sake of public tranquillity, had still this more than fiery Ordeal before their eyes; and, by the example of some of their number, who had been refused sepulture in those very tombs which their pride had prepared to their own memory, were taught both to venerate and to dread a law, which extended its punishments beyond the usual times of oblivion.

THE MORAL of this institution was truly sublime—constantly inculcating a most important lesson lesson — “ That whatever distinctions our wants and vices may render necessary, in this short and imperfect period of our being, they are all cancelled by the hand of Death; and, through the endless untried periods which succeed, virtue and beneficence will make the true distinctions, and be the only foundations of happiness and renewal.

If from the EGYPTIANS, we pass to the GREEKS, particularly the enlighten'd Athenians, we shall find that they had an express law, appointing Orations and public Funerals, in honor of those who gloriously sacrificed their lives to their country. And this solemn office was performed before the great assemblies of the people; sometimes for one, and sometimes for bands of heroes together.

THUCYDIDES has recorded a celebrated Oration of this last kind, delivered by Pericles. The illustrious speaker, after a most animating description of the Amor Patrie — the love of our country — which he exalts above all human virtues, turns to the deceased —

“ HAVING bestowed their lives to the public,
 “ every one of them, says he, hath received a “ praise that will never decay — a sepulchre that “ will always be most illustrious — not that in “ which their bones lie mouldering, but that in “ which their fame is preserved. This whole “ earth is the sepulchre of illustrious citizens” — and

and their inscription is written upon the hearts of all good men.

“As for you the survivors—from this very moment, emulating their virtues, place your sole happiness in liberty—and be prepared to follow its call through every danger.” Then, addressing himself with exquisite tenderness, to the relicts and children of the deceased, he suggests to them that the common-wealth was their husband, their father and brother —

“FROM this day forward to the age of maturity, shall the orphans be educated at the public expence of the state. For this benevolent meed have the laws appointed to all future relicts of those who may fall in the public contests.—”

NOR were the ROMANS less careful in this matter. Considering men in general as brave, more by art than nature; and that honor is a more powerful incentive than fear; they made frugality, temperance, patience of labor, manly exercise, and love of their country, the main principles of education. Cowardice and neglect of duty in the field, were seldom punished with death or corporal inflictions; but by what was accounted worse, a life decreed to ignominious expulsion and degradation from Roman privileges.

ON the contrary, deeds of public virtue were rewarded, according to their magnitude, with statues, statues, triumphs of various kinds, peculiar badges of dress at public solemnities, and * songs of praise to the living as well as the dead.

NEXT to the hymns composed in honor of the Gods, Poetry derived its origin from the songs of triumph to heroes, † who tamed the rude manners of mankind, ‡ founded cities, repelled the incursions of enemies, and gave peace to their country. And this custom began when Rome contained only a few shepherds gathering strength by an alluvies of the outcasts of neighbouring nations.

THOSE first efforts of poetic eulogy, whether in prose or verse (like those of a similar origin, which Nature, always the same, teaches our savage neighbours) although often sublime in substance, were yet so rude in structure, that ¶ Livy forbears quoting them, as having become intolerable to the more refined taste of his age; however suitable they might have been to the æra of their production.

WHAT a multitude of compositions of this kind must have existed between the barbarous
B songs

* They are called "Carmina," as wrought up in the high poetic style; but were not, therefore, always in verse or measure.

† Soliti sunt, in epulis, canere convivas ad tibicinem, de clarorum hominum virtute. Cic.

‡ Qui terras hominumque colunt genus, aspera bella Componunt, agros assignant, oppida condunt. Hor.

¶ Carmen canentes ibant, illa tempestate forsitas laudabile rudibus ingeniis, nunc abhorrens & inconditum si referatur.

songs of the military upon the triumph of * Cossius, and the celebrated panegyric of Pliny upon Trajan! They are said to have been swelled into two thousand volumes, even in the time of Augustus. In short, the praise of public virtue was wrought into the whole texture of Roman polity; and Virgil, calling Religion to his aid, gave it the highest finish.

HE divides his Hades, or place of GHOSTS, into different regions; and to the gulph of deepest perdition †, consigns those monsters of iniquity who delighted in the destruction of mankind, betrayed ‡ their country, or violated its religion and laws. There he excruciates them, in company with “ ¶ Gorgons and Hydras and Chimeras dire—”
 Vultures prey upon their vitals, or they are whirled eternally round with Ixion upon his wheel, or bound down with Tantalus †, whose burning lip hangs

* Longè maximum triumphum spectaculum fuit Cossius—in eum milites carmina incondita, æquantem eum Romulo, canere.

Liv.

† “ Full twice as deep the dungeon of the Fiends,

“ The huge Tartarean gloomy gulph descends

“ Below these regions, as these regions lie

“ From the bright realms of yon æthereal sky.”

‡ “ This wretch his country to a tyrant sold,

“ And barter'd glorious Liberty for gold:

“ Laws for a bribe he pass'd—but pass'd in vain;

“ For these same laws a bribe repeal'd again.”

¶ Milton here borrows his monsters from Virgil

“ flammisque armata Chimæra;

“ Gorgones, Harpiæque.”—&c.

See Virgil, B. VI, from line 288, to line 627; or Pitt's excellent Translation.

† Tantalus a labris, sitiens, fugientia captat Flumina.

Hor.

sublime ISAIAH, foretelling the fall of Babylon, has an ODE of triumph, wherein he exults over its haughty Monarch in strains of wonderful irony and reproach. He reprobates him as a destroyer of mankind; who had “made the world a wilderness.” He represents the whole earth as delivered from a curse by his fall! The trees of the forest rejoice, because he is laid low! The very grave refuses a covering to his execrable corse! he is consign’d to the depths of misery; while the infernal mansions themselves are moved at his approach, and the ghosts of departed tyrants rise up, in horrid array and mockery of triumph, to bid him welcome to his final abode!

THE astonishing grandeur and spirit of this passage, and indeed of the whole Ode, are unrivalled by any * Poet of Greek or Roman name.

“How hath the oppressor ceased! The Lord “hath broken the staff of the wicked! He that “smote the people in wrath—that ruled the na“tions in anger—is persecuted and none hinder-“eth! the whole earth is at rest—they break “forth into singing; yea the Fir-trees rejoice at “thee, and the Cedars of Lebanon, saying, since “thou art laid down, no feller is come up “against us,

HELL

* Alcæus himself (saith Bishop Newton) so highly renowned for his hatred of tyranny, and whose odes are alike animated by the spirit of Liberty and Poetry, has nothing that can be compared with the Prophet in this place.

" HELL from beneath is moved for thee, to " meet thee at thy coming. It stirret. up the " dead for thee—even the chiefs of the nations!
 " They say unto thee, art thou also become " weak as we? Thy pomp is brought down to " the grave—How art thou fallen, O Lucifer,
 " that didst weaken the nations? All kings,
 " [meaning just and merciful kings] even all
 " of them lie in glory, every one in his own " house (or sepulchre); but thou art cast out of
 " thy grave like an abominable branch" &c. *

BUT although the reward of heroes, in the christian's heaven, be our proper theme on this solemn day; yet the passing view which we have taken of the perdition decreed to the traitors of their country, in the poet's hell, confirmed also by the voice of scripture, is not foreign to our main purpose.

I KNOW your bosoms glow with so strong an aversion to all the foes of liberty in this life, that you will surely avoid every thought and action, which might doom you to their company

The excellent Prelate above quoted, hath a further remark on this passage, which it would be unpardonable to omit.

" What a pleasure must it afford all readers of an exalted
 " taste and generous sentiments, all true lovers of liberty, to hear " the prophets thus exulting over tyrants and oppressors? The " scriptures, altho' often perverted to the purposes of tyranny,
 " are yet in their own nature, calculated to promote the civil
 " and religious liberties of mankind. True religion, virtue and " liberty, are more intimately connected than men commonly
 " consider."

* Isaiah xiv.

pany in the life to come; and therefore, bidding adieu—and may it be an eternal adieu—to those dreary regions and their miserable inhabitants, let us now exalt our joyous view to those celestial mansions, where the benefactors of mankind reap immortal triumphs!

“ Lo! the blest train advance along the meads,
 “ And snowy wreaths adorn their glorious heads—
 “ Patriots who perish'd for their country's right,
 “ Or nobly triumph'd in the field of fight—
 “ Worthies, who life by useful arts refin'd,
 “ With those who leave a deathless name behind,
 “ Friends of the world, and patrons of mankind.
 “ Some on the verdant plains are stretch'd along,
 “ Sweet to the ear, their tuneful Pæans rung—

BUT here, ye Pagan poets, and thou prince of their quire, we leave you far behind; for your sublimest flights are now infinitely short of the theme! Your gloomy Theology gave you tolerable aid in forming a hell, but the utmost efforts of natural genius could not make a heaven worthy of a rational and immortal soul! The glory of giving some animating description of that bliss “ which eye hath not seen, nor ear before heard, nor could the unenlightened heart of man otherwise conceive,” was left for a more divine teacher. From HIM we learn, that a heart pure and detached from sordid pleasures, a soul panting after perfection, striving to imitate the goodness of heaven, anticipating its approving sentence, and devoted to the service of mankind, shall at last rise rife and mix in eternal fellowship with the beatified Family of † God!

HAVING now, my respected countrymen—and I hope I do not weary you—laid a wide foundation upon the practice of the wisest nations—in support of the present solemnity; I shall add but little more concerning the public utility of the thing itself.

CIRCUMSTANCED as we now are, and perhaps shall long be, in building up a fabric for future ages, it would be a wise institution, if in imitation of the Genoese feast of union, we should make at least an annual pause, for a review of past incidents, and of the characters of those who have borne an illustrious share in them; thereby animating our virtue, and uniting

† A poet now, as may appear from the following lines of Thomson, can give us descriptions of elysian bliss, far superior to those of Virgil; “ whose ideas on this subject (as Mr. SPENCE “ observes) altho’ preferable to those of Homer and all the other “ ancient poets, are still so very low, that they seem little more “ than borrowed from holiday-sports on the banks of Tiber”

“ In those bright regions of celestial day,

“ Far other scenes, far other pleasures reign—

“ All beauty here below, to them compar’d,

“ Would like a rose before the mid-day sun,

“ Shrink up its blossom—like a bubble, break

“ The passing poor magnificence of kings—

“ For there the KING OF NATURE, in full blaze

“ Calls every splendor forth, and there his court,

“ Amid æthereal powers and virtues, holds—

“ Angels, archangels, tutelary gods,

“ Of cities, nations, empires, and of worlds—

“ But sacred be the veil that kindly clouds

“ A light too keen for mortals—

uniting ourselves more closely in the bonds of mutual friendship.

THE world, in general, is more willing to imitate, than to be taught; and examples of eminent characters have a stronger influence than written precepts. Men's actions are a more faithful mirror of their lives than their words. The former seldom deceive; but the latter often. The deeds of old contract a venerable authority over us, when sanctified by the voice of applauding ages; and, even in our own day, our hearts take an immediate part with those who have nobly triumphed, or greatly suffered in our behalf.

BUT the more useful the display of such characters may be to the world, the more difficult is the work. And I am not to learn, that of all kinds of writing, panegyric requires the most delicate hand. Men seldom endure the praise of any actions, but those which their self-love represents as possible to themselves. Whatever is held up as an example, if placed beyond the reach of humanity duly exalted by public spirit, will excite no emulation; and whatever is placed within the vulgar walks of life, will attract no attention.

THERE is a further difficulty, peculiar to certain times; particularly those of civil dissension, when the tempers of men are worked into ferment. Whence it happens, that they who who have been the subjects of obloquy in one age, have become the theme of praise in another. Such was Hampden—in the days of passive obedience, branded as a seditious disturber of his country's peace; and, at the blessed æra of the revolution, exalted into the first rank of patriots. Such was Sidney—condemned to a scaffold in the former period; and, in the latter, immortalized by the delegated voice of the nation!

WHAT judgment posterity will form of the present mighty contest, in which these United Colonies are engaged, I am at no loss to determine in my own heart. But, while the same actions are, by one part of a great empire, pronounced the most criminal resistance, and by another, the most laudable efforts of self-preservation; no public character can be drawn alike acceptable to all. Nevertheless, as the faithful historian is the best panegyrist of true merit, he will not fashion himself to times and seasons, but exalt himself above them; and, conscious of his dignity, as responsible to succeeding ages, will take eternal truth as his support, which can alone bear the impartial test of future examination. He knows that the divine colors of virtue, altho' they may give a temporary glare, will not blend or mellow into a ground-work of vice.

WHATEVER events, disastrous or happy, may lie before us; yet some degree of applause

G

even

even from an enemy, is certainly due to those illustrious men, who, led by conscience and a clear persuasion of duty, sacrifice their ease, their lives and fortunes to the public; and from their friends and country they are entitled to a deathless renown.

PERISH that narrow pride, which will suffer men to acknowledge no virtue, but among their own party. In this direful contest, the chief concern of a liberal mind, will be, that so much personal virtue as may be found on both sides, instead of being united in some great national point for the common good, should be dreadfully employed to the purpose of mutual destruction. And a man can as soon divest himself of his humanity, as refuse the tribute of veneration due to actions truly magnanimous.

WHEN once it becomes criminal to plead the cause of a suffering people; when their virtues can no longer be safely recorded — then tyranny has put the last hand to her barbarous work. All the valuable purposes of society are frustrated; and whatever other human fate remains will be wholly indifferent to the wise and good.

THERE are also many whose minds are so little, that they can conceive nothing great, which does not court the eye in all the trappings of dress, titles, and external splendor.

An

An American-Patriot! a Blanket-Hero! a General from the plough! all these are terms of ridicule and reproach among many. Yet such was CINCINNATUS, in the best days of Roman virtue; and a British poet, already quoted, hath boldly taught his countrymen this noble lesson—

“Some, with whom compar’d, your ind-tribes
 “Are but the beings of a summer’s day,
 “Have held the scale of empire, rul’d the storm
 “Of mighty war; then, with unweary’d hand,
 “Disdaining little delicacies, seiz’d
 “The PLOUGH, and greatly independent liv’d. THOMSON.

THE same noble lesson is also taught, by the well known story of the two Spanish grandees, who were sent ambassadors to the Hague. Notwithstanding all the pride of their nation, they did not despise the Dutch deputies when they met them in a plain habit, and saw them on a journey sit down upon the grass, to a frugal repast of bread and cheese, out of their knapsacks. On the contrary, they cried out, “We shall never be able to conquer these people; we must even make peace with them.”

SHOULD ambassadors honor us with a visit, upon a like occasion; let us be prepared to meet them in the same majestic simplicity of dress and manners. Let us convince them that public virtue is confined to no class of men; and that altho’ it sometimes basks in the sunshine of courts, it frequently lies hid in the shades of obscurity, like the latent fire in flint, till called forth by the collisive hand of oppression.

ADVERSITY is the season which shews the spirit of a man in its full vigor; and times of civil calamity never fail to strike forth lights, sometimes single, and sometimes whole constellations mingling their kindred rays to warm and to illuminate the genius of their country.

THE sacred flame thus enkindled, is not fed by the fuel of faction or party; but by pure benevolence and love of the public. It therefore, soon rises above the selfish principles, refines and brightens as it rises, and expands itself into heavenly dimensions. Being inextinguishable in its own nature, the blood of thousands on the scaffold or in the field, is but as oil poured into a conflagration, encreasing its vehemence, till it consumes all before it; burning still clearer and stronger, unto the full day of peace and civil happiness.

THOSE who enjoy a true portion of this divine flame, duly called forth into exercise, stand in no need of further titles or distinctions, either by birth or grant. For what can the world present greater to the sight of mortals, or even immortals, than a man who knows and courts the blessings of peace, who wishes to breathe out his last in its arms; and keeping it still as his object, is nevertheless roused by the first pang of his suffering country;

try; gives his whole illustrious spirit to her relief; rises above all human allurements; never remits his zeal; fears nothing; * regards nothing—but the sentiments which virtue and magnanimity inspire? What higher qualities can be required to entitle a man to the veneration and eulogies of his country? And these too will be his most durable monument.

THE magnificent structures raised by the gratitude of mankind to their benefactors of old, had but a local and temporary use. They were beheld only by one people, and for a few ages —

“ The Heav’n aspiring pyramid, the proud “ Triumphant arch, and all that e’er upheld
 “ The worshipp’d name of hoar antiquity
 “ Are mouldering into dust—

IN vain does the way-faring man investigate the tottering ruins for the divinity once enshrined there! A scanty receptacle, about six feet in length and half the breadth, informs him that it once contained some human dust, long since mingled with the common mass. In vain does the prying antiquary dwell upon the sculpture, or strive to collect and spell the scattered fragments of letters. The inscription is gone—long since gone, effaced, obliterated! And fruitless were the

* Nihil extimescere; omnia humana despiciere; nihil quod homini accidere possit intolerandum putare. Cic.

the search, through the whole world, for the Hero's name, if it were not recorded in the Orator's page, and proclaimed by the faithful voice of history.

THERE it shall live, while the smallest vestiges of literature remain upon earth—yea, till the final dissolution of things human; nor shall it perish then; but, being the immediate care of Heaven, the great Archangel, when he sweeps suns and systems from their place, and kindles up their last fires, stretching forth his mighty arm, shall pluck the deathless scroll from the devouring conflagration and give it a place among the achievements of eternity!

BUT whither am I borne? to what heights have I ascended? I look down with astonishment and tremble at my situation! Oh! Let your friendly arms be extended to save me as I fall. For in the idea I have of my subject, I have undertaken to guide the chariot of the sun; and how shall I steer through the exalted tract that lies before me? Considering myself as honored with this day's office by the delegated voice of some millions of people through a vast continent, upon an occasion, wherein their gratitude, their dignity, their love of liberty, nay even their reputation in literature—are all in some degree concerned; what language shall I use, or how shall I accommodate myself to every circumstance, in the arduous work?

TRUTH

TRUTH alone must guide the hand that delineates a character. Should I affect to soar aloft and dip my pencil in the colours of the sky, I should but endanger my own wings, melt their wax, and be precipitated headlong. Nor is the danger less in the other extreme.

OH! then, for some better Phœbus, some presiding Genius, to guide me through my remaining way; to point out the middle path, and teach me to unite dignity with ease, strength with perspicuity; and truth with the unaffected graces of elocution. Or rather, you shall be my Phœbus, my inspiring as well as presiding Genius, ye delegated fathers of your country! So far will I strive to imitate * him, who always animated himself with his subject, by thus accosting himself before he went forth to speak—

“ REMEMBER, thou art this day going to address men born in the arms of liberty, GREEKANS, ATHENIANS!—Let no thought enter thy heart—let no word fall from thy tongue unworthy of such an audience!

As to that hero, whose memory you celebrate as a Proto-Martyr † to your rights—for through whatever fields I have strayed, he has never escaped my view---as to him I say, if any thing human

* Pericles.

† The author did not intend to appropriate this term so as to detract from the merit of Dr. Warren, and other brave men who fell before in the same cause.

man could now reach his ear, nothing but the great concerns of virtue, liberty, truth and justice would be tolerable to him; for to these was his life devoted from his early years.

HE had received a liberal education in Ireland his native country, before he went into the army; and was indeed endued with talents which would have led him to eminence in any profession. His own he studied with a felicity which soon distinguished his military abilities; but war and conquest having no other charms to him than as the necessary means of peace and happiness to mankind; he still found leisure, in the midst of camps, to cultivate an excellent taste for philosophy and polite literature. To these he added a careful study of the arts of government, and the rights of mankind; looking forward to that time, when he might descend into the still scenes of private life; and give a full flow to the native and acquired virtues of a heart rich in moral excellence.

ABOVE eighteen years ago he had attained the rank of Captain in the 17th regiment, under General Monkton, and stood full in the way of higher preferment; having borne a share in all the labors of our American wars, and the reduction of Canada. Ill-fated region! short-sighted mortals! Little did he foresee the scenes which that land had still in reserve for him! Little did those generous Americans, who then stood by his his side, think that they were assisting to subdue a country, which would one day be held up over us, as a greater scourge in the hands of friends, than ever it was in the hands of enemies!

HAD such a thought then entered our hearts, we should have started with indignation from the deed of horror. Our heroism would have appeared madness and parricide! The lifted steel would have dropped from the warrior's arm! The axe and the hoe from the laborer's grasp! America would have weeped through all her forests; and her well-cultivated fields refused to yield farther sustenance to her infatuated sons!

BUT far different were our thoughts at that time. We considered ourselves as co-operating with our brethren for the glory of the empire; to enable them to secure our common peace and liberty; to humanize, adorn, and dignify, with British privileges, a vast Continent; to become strong in our strength, happy in our happiness; and to derive that from our affection, which no force can extort from a free people, and which the miserable and oppressed cannot give!

AND these, too, were the sentiments of our lamented Hero; for he had formed an early attachment, amounting even to an enthusiastic love, for this country! The woodland and the plain; the face of Nature, grand, venerable, and yet rejoicing in her primè; our mighty rivers, descending in vast cataracts thro' wild and shaggy mountains, or gliding in silent majesty thro' fertile vales; their numerous branches and tributary springs; our romantic scenes of rural quiet; our simplicity of manners, yet uncorrupted by luxury or flagrant vice; our love of knowledge and ardor for liberty—all these serv'd to convey the idea of primæval felicity to a heart which he had taught to beat unison with the harmony of Heaven!

He therefore chose America, as the field of his future usefulness; and as soon as the blessings of peace were restored to his country, and duty to his Sovereign would permit, he took his leave of the army, and having soon connected himself, by marriage, with an ancient and honorable family, in the province of New-York, he chose a delightful retirement upon the banks of Hudson's river, at a distance from the noise of the busy world! Having a heart distended with benevolence, and panting to do good, he soon acquired, without courting it from his neighbours, that authority, which an opinion of superior talents and inflexible integrity, never fail to create.

In this most eligible of all situations, the life of a country gentleman, deriving its most exquisite relish from reflection upon past dangers and past services, he gave full scope to his Philosophic spirit, and taste for rural elegance. Self-satisfied and
and

and raised above vulgar ambition, he devoted his time to sweet domestic intercourse with the amiable partner of his heart, friendly converse with men of worth, the study of useful books, and the improvement of his favour'd villa. Nor from that happy spot did he wish to stray, until he should receive his last summons to happiness more than terrestrial.

BUT when the hand of power was stretch'd forth against the land of his residence, he had a heart too noble not to sympathize in its distress. From that fatal day--and Oh! that it had never found a place in the Volumes of Time--from that fatal day, in which the first American blood was spilt by the hostile hands of British brethren, and the better Genius of the empire, veiling her face in anguish, turn'd abhorrent from the STRIFE OF DEATH AMONG HER CHILDREN—I say, from that fatal day, he chose his part.

ALTHOUGH his liberal spirit placed him above local prejudices, and he considered himself as a member of the empire at large; yet America, struggling in the cause of Liberty, henceforth became his peculiar country;--and that country took full possession of his soul; lifting him above this earthly dross, and every private affection! Worth like his could be no longer hid in the shades of obscurity; nor permit him to be placed in that inferior station with which a mind, great in humility and self-denial, would have been contented. It was wisely considered that he who had so well learned to obey, was fittest to command; and therefore, being well assured of his own heart, he resigned himself to the public voice, nor hesitated a moment longer to accept the important commission freely offered to him, and, with the firmness of another Regulus, to bid farewell to his peaceful retirement, and domestic endearments.

HERE followed a scene of undissembled tenderness and distress, which all who hear me may, in some degree conceive; but all cannot truly feel. You only who are husbands---whose hearts have been intimately blended with the partners of your bliss, and have known the pangs of separation, when launching into dangers, uncertain of your fate---You only would I now more directly address. Give a moment's pause for reflection! Recall your own former feelings, your inward struggles, your virtuous tears! Here bid them again freely flow, while you listen to our hero's parting words. —

Ye scenes where home-felt pleasures dwell,
And thou my dearer self, farewell!
“ Perhaps the Cypress, only tree
“ Of all these groves, shall follow me — *
But still to Triumph or a Tomb,
Where Virtue calls, I come, I come!

“ I COME,

[The foregoing lines were set and performed to music, which gave an opportunity of a pause, in delivering the Oration.]

* Hor. B. 2. Ode 14. l. 22—24

I COME, I COME! Nor were these the words of disappointed ambition; nor dictated by any sudden start of party zeal. He had weighed the contest well, was intimately acquainted with the unalienable rights of freemen, and ready to support them at every peril! He had long foreseen and lamented the fatal issue to which things were hastening. He knew that the sword of civil destruction, once drawn, is not easily sheathed; that men having their minds inflamed and the weapons of defence in their hands, seldom know the just point where to stop, even when they have it in their power; and often proceed to actions, the bare contemplation of which would at first have astonished them.

It was therefore his desire rather to soften than enflame violent humors, wishing that America, in all her actions, might stand justified in the sight of God and the World. He foresaw the horrid train of evils which would be let loose by the stroke which should sever the ancient bond of union between Great-Britain and us. It was therefore his wish that such a stroke should never proceed first from the hand of America. Nor did it so proceed.

THE resistance made at LEXINGTON was not the traitorous act of men conspiring against the supreme powers; nor directed by the councils of any public body in America; but rose immediately out of the case, and was dictated by self-preservation, servation, the first great law of Nature as well as Society. If there was any premeditated scheme here, it was premeditated by those who created the dreadful necessity, either of resistance or ruin. For could it be expected that any people, possessing the least remains of virtue and liberty, would tamely submit to destruction and ravage---to be disarmed as slaves; stripped of their property and left a naked prey even to the insults of surrounding savages?

Was this an experiment worthy of Great-Britain? Where was the wisdom of her counsellors? Had their justice, their moderation quite forsaken them? Could they possibly expect obedience in such a case as this? Would they themselves, in a similar case, even under a competent legislative authority, submit to laws which would destroy the great end of all laws, Self-Preservation? Human nature says, No. The Genius of the English constitution says, No. The nation itself hath heretofore said, No; and a great oracle † of its laws has given his sanction to the verdict—" In cases of national oppression, says he, the nation hath very justifiably risen as one man, to vindicate the original contract, subsisting between the King and people." And—" If the sovereign power threaten desolation to a state, mankind will not be reasoned out of the feelings of humanity, nor sacrifice liberty to a scrupulous adherence to political maxims."

IF

† Blackstone

If the case of America does not come within the above description, there seems to be no equity left upon earth; and whatever is exacted by force must be yielded through fear. But if justice be any thing more than a name, it is surely a solecism in politics to say, that one part of a free country has a right to command that which the other "cannot obey without being slaves, nor " resist without being rebels." Yet to such a sad dilemma does the parliamentary claim of a "right to bind us in all cases whatsoever," reduce America; involving in it a total surrender of our liberties; superseding the use of our own legislatures; marking us with such a badge of servitude as no freemen can consent to wear; and subjecting us to burdens laid by those who are not only unacquainted with our circumstances, and bear no part of the weight, but ease themselves in proportion as they load us. If this be law, if it be equity, it has no example among any other people, possessing the least glimmerings of virtue or native freedom.

But although this claim be so repugnant to every idea of natural as well as legal justice, that the guilt of blood which it may occasion can be chargeable only on those who attempt to enforce it; yet I am well assured that when compelled at last by hard necessity, either to avert the dagger pointed at our breast or crouch to unconditional servitude, our hero's heart bled for the dreadful alternative.

His principles of loyalty to his sovereign (whom he had long served, and whose true glory consists consists in healing those streaming wounds) remained firm and unshaken. Love to our brethren whom we must oppose; the interchange of good offices, which had so intimately knit the bonds of friendship between them and us; the memory of those better days in which we fought and triumphed together; the vast fabric of mutual happiness raised by our union, and ready to be dissolved by our dissensions; the annihilation of those numerous plans of improvement in which we were engaged for the glory of the empire—all these considerations conspired to render this contest peculiarly abhorrent to him and every virtuous American, and could have been outweighed by nothing earthly, but the unquenchable love of liberty, and that sacred duty which we owe to ourselves and our posterity.

HENCE, as appears from his papers, even in the full triumph of success, he most ardently joined his worthy friend † General Schuyler in praying that “Heaven may speedily re-unite us in every bond of affection and interest; and that the British empire may again become the envy and admiration of the universe, and flourish” till the consummation of earthly things.

THIS part of his character, I dwell upon with particular satisfaction; and indeed had he evidenced a contrary sentiment, or gone forth in the rage of conquest instead of the spirit of reconciliation; not all his other virtues, nor yet the respect which I owe to the appointment
wherewith

† In his letter of Nov. 8th.

where with I am now honored, could have induced me to appear in this place, on this occasion.

GOD forbid that any of the profession to which I belong, should ever forget their peculiar character, exercise a turbulent spirit, or prostitute their voice to enflame men's minds to the purposes of wild ambition, or mutual destruction. I am happy in knowing that nothing of this kind is wished from me; nay that the delegated voice of the continent, as well as of this particular province, supports me in praying for a restoration " of the former " harmony between Great-Britain and these " Colonies upon so firm a basis as to perpetuate its blessings, uninterrupted by any future " dissensions, to succeeding generations in both " countries *"

E. INDEED

* The above paragraph having been either misrepresented or misunderstood by some, the author does not think himself at liberty to make the least alteration in it, even if he judged any to be necessary. The quotation from the last petition of Congress, as well as the reference made to the Instructions of our Assembly, both point to a past period; and the author cannot be considered, from thence, as taking upon him to make the least declaration concerning the present sentiments of either of these bodies; nor is there a word which can preclude the taking into the terms of accommodation, so far as may be thought reasonable, the redress of whatever grievances or losses we may have sustained, since that period. Upon the whole, it is presumed, that a single sentiment is not to be found in the Oration, which is not fully consonant to every declaration of Congress which has yet appeared. And to impute to them, or even suspect, the least change of sentiment, before they themselves have declared it, would not only be indecent but very injurious to our cause. The author is also consistent with himself, and if the same doctrines which, he has been told, were well received in his late publication, should now be disagreeable to any, the fault is not his. But he will give the reader no further trouble on this topic, unless his own defence should in future render it necessary.

INDEED this matter rests in safe hands, and is clear in itself. If redress of grievances, essential liberty, and security against future oppression can be obtained, agreeable to our own desires; then neither consistency, dignity, or a regard to our illustrious British Friends, who have defended our cause, pledged themselves for our sincerity, and hope by our aid to restore and perpetuate the glory of the whole empire, can suffer us to hesitate. To say, let them look to their own safety, and we will look to ours, would be unworthy of the liberal soul of any American, truly animated in our present cause, and with the love of universal liberty.

BUT suppose these terms cannot be obtained; Why then, there will be no need of further arguments, much less of aggravations. Timid as my heart perhaps is, and ill-tuned as my ear may be to the din of arms and the clangor of the trumpet; yet, in that case, sounds which are a thousand times more harsh — “even the croaking of frogs in the uncultivated fen,” or the howling of wild beasts on the mountain top, where Liberty dwells, would be “preferable to the nightingale’s song” in vales of slavery, or the melting notes of CORELLI in cities clanking their chains!

If this be a digression, pardon it as the last, and due to my own principles and consistency. I now hasten to attend our hero through the remainder of his career—short indeed! but crowded

ed with scenes of virtuous activity, which would have dignified the longest life.

THE Canada expedition is one of those measures, which the enemies of American peace having first rendered necessary, will now strive to misconstrue into hostility and offence. But when authentic proofs were obtained that a people professing a religion, and subjected to laws, different from ours, together with numerous tribes of savages were instigated and preparing to deluge our frontiers in blood, let God and the world judge whether it was an act of offence; or rather, whether it was not mercy to them, to ourselves, to the whole British empire, to use the means in our power for frustrating the barbarous attempt.

INDEED there was benevolence in the whole plan of his expedition. It was to be executed not so much by force as by persuasion; and appearing in the country with such a respectable strength, as might protect the inhabitants from the insults and vengeance of those, who were striving to make them lift up their reluctant arm to the shedding fraternal blood. It was further wished to kindle up the expiring lamp of liberty among them; to open their eyes to its divine effulgence; and enable them to raise their drooping head, and claim its blessings as their own.

THIS was a work, in all its parts, suited to the genius of a MONTGOMERY. He had a head and heart which equally pointed him out as a fit guide in such an undertaking. He understood and could well explain the blessings of a free government. Persuasion dwelt upon his tongue. He had a soul, great, disinterested, affectionate, delighting to alleviate distress, and to diffuse happiness. He had an industry not to be wearied out; a vigilance not to be imposed upon; and a courage, when necessary, equal to his other abilities.

BUT still, with a few new-raised men, of different colonies, and perhaps different tempers; ill supplied with arms and ammunition; worse disciplined; unaccustomed to look cannon in the face; to make or to mount a breach—in such circumstances, I say, and in the short space of an autumnal and winter campaign, in rigorous northern climes, to achieve a work which cost Great-Britain and the colonies the labor of several campaigns, and what was a sacrifice of infinitely more value—the life of the immortal WOLFE—this certainly required a degree of magnanimity beyond the ordinary reach, and the exertion of the highest abilities of every kind.

THE command and conduct of an army, were but small parts of this undertaking. The Indians were to be treated with, restrained and kept in temper. The Canadians were likewise to be managed, protected and supported: And even his own army in some degree to be formed, formed, disciplined, animated, accustomed to marches, incampments, dangers, fatigues and the frequent want of necessaries.

CAMPS, of all worldly scenes, often exhibit the greatest pictures of distress. The sick and the wounded—the dying and the dead—as well as the wants and sufferings of the living—all these call forth the most tender feelings, and require of a General that, to the courage of a soldier, he should unite the utmost benevolence of a man!

OUR General possessed these united qualities in their highest lustre; of which there are numerous testimonies not only from his own army, but from the prisoners, English as well as Canadians, now amongst us.

WHEN his men laboured under fatigue, wanted bread and other necessaries, had their beds to make in snow or deep morasses, they were ashamed to complain, finding that he was willing to share in the execution of whatever he commanded. And the example which he thus set to others, did more to inspire patience, obedience, love of order and discipline, than the most rigid exercise of power could have done. The influence of this example was still stronger, as it did not appear to be the effect of constraint or political necessity; but the amiable expression of a sympathizing soul; leading him to condescend to all capacities; ties; exact in his own duties, and great even in common things. His letters, confidential as well as official, are a full proof of this.

“OUR incampment is so swampy, I feel, says
 “he, exceedingly for the troops; and provisions
 “so scarce, it will require not only dispatch,
 “but good fortune, to keep us from distress—“Should things not go well, I tremble for the “fate of the poor Canadians, who have ventu“red so much. What shall I do with them,
 “should I be obliged to evacuate this country?
 “I have assured them that the United Colonies
 “will as soon give up Massachusetts to resent“ment as them.”—

THESE sentiments were worthy of an heroic soul, and of the faith he had pledged to those people. Nor is he less to be venerated for his tender regard towards his own army—Instead of making a merit of his difficulties (which were indeed more than ought to be mentioned in this place) he often seeks to conceal them; ascribing any little faults or tardiness, in his young troops, to their want of experience in forming; to their hard duty, the constant succession of bad weather and the like—still encouraging them to nobler efforts in future. And if any impatience of discipline appeared, he nobly attributes it to “that spirit of freedom, which “men accustomed to think for themselves,
 “will even bring into camps with them.”

HIS

His own superior military knowledge he has been known to sacrifice to the general voice, rather than interrupt that union on which success depended; and when a measure was once resolved upon by the majority, however much contrary to his own advice and judgment, he magnanimously supported it with his utmost vigor; disdaining that work of low ambition, which will strive to defeat in the execution what it could not direct in planning.

His perseverance and conduct in gaining possession of St. John's and Montreal, have already been the theme of every tongue, and need not be mentioned in this place. His abilities in negotiation; the precision with which the various articles of treaties and capitulations are expressed; the generous applause he gives, not only to every worthy effort of his own Officers, but to the Commanding Officer and garrison of St. Johns; his noble declaration to the inhabitants of Montreal, "that the Continental Armies despise every act of oppression and violence, being come for the express purpose of giving liberty and security"—all these I say, did honor to himself, and to that delegated body, under whose authority he acted.

LEAVING him, therefore for a while—alas too short a while—to enjoy the noblest of all triumphs, the applause of his country, and the conscious testimony of his own heart, let us enquire after another band of brave and hardy men

men, who are stemming rapid rivers, ascending pathless mountains, traversing unpeopled deserts, and hastening through deep morasses and gloomy woods to meet him in scenes of another issue—

—————Deserts in vain

Oppos'd their course, and deep rapacious floods,
And mountains in whose jaws destruction grin'd,
Hunger and toil—Armenian snows and storms!
Greece in their view and glory yet untouch'd,
They held their fearless way—Oh! strength of mind
Almost almighty in severe extremes! *

THIS praise was paid to TEN THOUSAND HEROES, sustaining every danger, in a retreat to their own country, and is certainly due, so far as heroism is concerned, to less than a tenth part of the number, marching through equal difficulties against the capital of a hostile country.

EVEN the march of HANNIBAL over the Alps, so much celebrated in history, (allowing for the disparity of numbers) has nothing in it of superior merit, to the march of ARNOLD; and in many circumstances there is a most striking similitude.

THE former had to encounter the rapid Rhone; the latter, the more rapid Kennebeck, thro' an immense length of country. The former, when he came to quit the river, found his further passage barr'd by mountains, rearing their snowy crests to the sky, rugged, wild, uncultivated. This was also the case with the latter, whose troops, carrying their boats and baggage, were obliged to cross and recross the same mountains sundry times. At the foot of the mountains, the former was deserted by three thousand of his army, desponding at the length of the way, and terrified at the hideous view of those stupendous heights, which they considered as impassable—In like circumstances, about a third part of the army of the latter, deserted shall I say, or use the more courteous language—"returned home.*" The march of the former was about twelve hundred miles in five months. The Virginia and Pennsylvania rifle-companies, belonging to the latter, including their first march from their own habitations to Cambridge, and thence to Quebec, marched near the same distance in about three months.

* Thomson.

F BESIDES

* When the Oration was delivered, the Author did not know that an enquiry had been made into the reasons of the return of this party, and that the Commanding Officer has been acquitted. But as a very general censure had been passed upon him through the Colonies, it was judged much more honorable for him to insert an account of his acquitment, than to suppress the paragraph—for all these transactions will be fully scrutinized by future historians.

It was at the foot of the Pyreneas that the 3000 deserted from Hannibal, and he freely dismissed 7000 more, whose courage he perceived was not equal to the undertaking. Indeed Livy tells us that the sight of the Alps, "their snow-clad tops almost penetrating Heaven, the rude cottages built on rocks, sheep and oxen pinched with cold, the men savage and wearing long beards, every thing both animate and inanimate stiff with frost"—struck even the remainder of his army with a temporary panic. It is not clear what use Hannibal made of his boats after crossing the Rhone, whether to carry his baggage, as he ascended along its banks or not.

BESIDES these rifle-companies, Arnold's corps consisted of about five hundred New-England troops, who sustained all the fatigues of the worst part of the march by land and water, with the utmost fortitude. And General MONTGOMERY, ever ready to do justice to merit, having joined them before QUEBEC, gives their commander and them this character—

“ THEY are an exceeding fine body of men,
 “ inured to fatigue, with a stile of discipline “ among them much superior to what I have “ been used to see this campaign—He himself
 “ is active, intelligent, and enterprizing.”

HAVING approached those plains which the blood of WOLFE hath consecrated to deathless fame, our hero seemed emulous of his glory, and animated with a kindred spirit. The situation of his army pressed dispatch! snows and frosts only quickened his motions. He hoped by one successful stroke, before the arrival of succours to the garrison, to complete his plan, and save the future effusion of much blood. He further flattered himself, that his success, if speedy, might have some influence upon Parliament, in hastening a reconciliation. He understood that maxim of Folard—“ No obstacle should break our resolution, when there is but a moment between “ a bad situation and a worse”—This sentiment he expresses in his last letter with a spirit of modesty, and a sense of duty, as well as the danger danger

danger attending it, which ought to be for ever recorded to his glory.—“ I shall be sorry to be “ reduced to this mode of attack; because I “ know the melancholy consequences. But the “ approaching severity of the season, the weak“ ness of the garrison, together with the na“ ture of the works, point it out too strong to “ be passed by. Fortune often baffles the most “ sanguine expectations of poor mortals—I “ am not intoxicated with the favors I have re“ ceived at her hands—But I think there is a “ fair prospect of success.”

POOR mortals indeed, if nothing was to remain of them after death; for while he was courting this success, and gloriously leading on his troops in the front of danger, he received the fatal stroke, which in an instant released his great spirit, to follow and join the immortal spirit of WOLFE!

O THOU swift winged messenger of destruction, how didst thou triumph in that moment! the stroke that sever'd Montgomery from his army, deprived them of more than a member. It reached the vitals, and struck the whole body with a temporary death. As when the forked lightning, darting thro' the forest, amid the black tempests of night, rends some towering oak, and lays its honors in the dust, the inferior trees which it had long sheltered from the storm, stand mournful around, so stood the astonished bands over their fallen Chieftain!—nor over him alone; but over others, in their prime of glory, prostrate by his side!

HERE, ye Pennsylvanian youths, second to none in virtue, let a portion of your tears be sacred to the manes of MACPHERSON! You remember his generous spirit in his early years, for he drank of the same springs of science with many of you now before me; and we who reached the cup to your lip, rejoice that it contributed to invigorate both him and you into wisdom and public spirit. Having finished his scholastic * education, he studied the laws of his country, under a lawyer and patriot † of distinguished name; and animated by his example, as well as precepts, had become eminent in his profession, at an age when some have scarce begun to think of business. The love of liberty being his ruling passion, he thought it his duty in the present struggle, to offer himself to the service of his country, and he had soon an opportunity of attaining that military pre-eminence, of which he was laudably ambitious.

ENJOYING

* He was educated partly at the college of Philadelphia, and partly at that of New-Jersey. A few days before his death, he visited the very spot on which General WOLF † expired; and the reflections in his letter on this occasion, as well as in that which he left sealed up, for his father, in case of his death in the attack upon Quebec, were such as became a christian and a soldier. He bequeathed what little fortune he had accumulated, to his only brother, an officer in the regular army. As a reward for his services, he was appointed by the Congress, a Major in a battalion to be raised in the Delaware counties, but had received no account of this promotion.

† John Dickenson, Esquire.

ENJOYING an hereditary bravery, joined to a well cultivated understanding, and an active spirit, he soon became the bosom friend of General Montgomery, was his Aid de camp, was entrusted with a share in the management of his most important negotiations, stood by his side in the attack upon Quebec, and being, as it were animated by one common soul, and dear to each other in life—in death, they were not a moment divided!

HERE likewise fell Captain CHEESMAN, of the New-York forces, covered with honor, and lamented by all who knew him, as an active and gallant officer. His particular merits, as well as the merits of some others, who shared his fate, ought to be more fully commemorated on this occasion, if proper accounts of them could be collected.

I MUST not, however, omit the name of the brave Captain HENDRICKS, who commanded one of the Pennsylvania rifle-companies, and was known to me from his infancy. He was indeed prodigal of his life, and courted danger out of his tour of duty. The command of the guard belonged to him, on the morning of the attack; but he solicited and obtained leave to take a more conspicuous post; and having led his men through the barrier, where his commanding officer, General ARNOLD, was wounded, he long sustained the fire of the garrison son with unshaken firmness, till at last, receiving a shot in his breast, he immediately expired. *

SUCH examples of magnanimity filled even adversaries with veneration and esteem. Forgetting the foes in the heroes, they gathered up their breathless remains, and committed them to kindred dust, with pious hands "and funeral honors meet."—So may your own remains, and particularly thine, O CARLTON, be honored, should it ever be your fate to fall in hostile fields! Or if, amid the various chances of war, your lot should be among the prisoners and the wounded, may you be distinguished with an ample return of that benevolence which you have shewn to others. Such offices of humanity, softening the savage scenes of war, will entitle you to an honor which all the pride of conquest cannot bestow—much less a conquest over fellow-subjects, contending for the common rights of freemen.

By such offices as these, you likewise give a gleam of comfort to these mourners, who mix their

* These particulars were certified by General Thomson and Colonel Mifflin, his commanders in the Pennsylvania rifle-regiment, and they give me this further character of him in their letter, viz. "No fatigues or duty ever discouraged him—He paid the strictest attention to his company, and was ambitious that they should excel in discipline, sobriety and order. His social and domestic virtues you were well acquainted with."— their tears with our † Schuylkill and Susquehannah; and to her ‡ especially, on Hudson's river, pre eminent in woe! Angels and ministers of grace, complete her consolations! Tell her, in gentlest accents, what wreaths of glory you have entwined, to adorn the brows of those who die for their country; and hovering for a while, on the wing of pity, listen to her mournful strain —

* Sweet ivy, twin'd with myrtle, form a shade
Around the tomb where brave Montgomery's laid!
Beneath your boughs, shut from the beams of day,
My ceaseless tears shall bathe the warrior's clay;
And injur'd "Freedom shall a while repair,
To dwell, with me, a weeping hermit there."

HAVING now paid the honours due to the memories of our departed friends, what need I add more? Illustrious, although short, was their race! "But old age is not that which standeth in length of time, nor is measured by number of years—wisdom is the grey hair to man, and an unspotted life is old age."

To

† The rivers on which the parents of Major Macpherson and Captain Hendricks live.

‡ Mrs. Montgomery.

* The original lines, for which these were substituted and performed to music, are well known, viz.

"Wind gentle Ever-green to form a shade,
"Around the Tomb where Sophocles is laid, &c.

Part of the two last lines is from an Ode of Collins.

To such men, Rome in all her glory would have decreed honors; and the resolve of Congress to transmit the memory of their virtues, is worthy of that magnanimity which ought to characterize public bodies. Jealous and arbitrary rulers are sparing of honors to those who serve lest their own should be thus eclipsed. But your lustre, Gentlemen, can suffer no diminution this way; and the glory you justly bestow upon others, will only be reflected to encrease your own!

F I N I S.

... would Congress is wor-
to chaarbitrary no serve eclipsed.
no di-
u justly ected to

